USASF Tumbling Levels Progression

Disclaimer: Please note that no two athletes are alike. One athlete may master a cartwheel or backhandspring in 1-2 weeks, while another younger or older athlete may take 6-8 weeks (or even longer) to master the same skill. The key is teaching proper technique, which is what we do and are responsible for, and most importantly there must be consistency and positivity, which is what you and your athlete are responsible for. When these are intact, the athlete will progress. Furthermore, once an athlete masters a new skill, this does not mean that the athlete is immediately ready and prepared to perform that skill within a routine. There are several other components that make up a routine (ie. stunts, transitions, choreography and dance). When these components are added, the athlete may or may not be able to consistently and adequately perform their raw mastered tumbling level. In coaching and team placement, we consider all of these things in an effort to best benefit the athlete and the team. Please be mindful of this information and encourage your athlete to remain consistent and positive in his/her quest to master desired tumbling skills.
